Do pigs like music?

Scientists in Belgium are researching a farmer’s claim that music can change the (0) behavio(u)r (behave) of his pigs. Farmer Piet Paesmans first noticed it when his son started singing a tune during a slow and (47) _____ (bore) work session. Suddenly, some pigs became (48) _____ (excite) and started wagging their tails. “I thought we should try that with the other pigs too,” Paesmans told Reuters.

He has created a playlist with music for (49) _____ (differ) parts of the day. He plays (50) _____ (live) music when he wants the pigs to be active and calm lullabies at the end of the day to make them sleepy.

“Cheerful dance songs are the (51) _____ (big) hits. When it is really energetic, the animals even start dancing around. However, rock music is too strong, so they don’t like it,” Paesmans said.

The farmer contacted a team of researchers who got 75,000 euros from the European Union to study this matter. According to the project leader, Sander Palmans, not much is (52) _____ (actual) known about pigs’ reaction to music, but Paesmans’ experience corresponds to the (53) _____ (know) we already have of how sounds can generally influence animals.

“Some noises (54) _____ (certain) have an effect on animals. So I believe it really is a (55) _____ (possible) that music can have the same effect,” he said. He added that music could help animals with boredom, which has been linked to stress.

Read the texts (A–E) about summer camps in the UK. Then read the statements (39–46) and decide which text they are about. Write the correct letter (A–E) after each statement. The letters can be chosen more than once.

An example (0) has been done for you.

Summer camps in the UK

- A This camp is best for a classic American summer camp experience for 7-17-year-old children. The camp runs for two weeks at two Scottish locations – Crieff and Edinburgh – with campers divided into groups of 8–10 who are of the same gender, about the same age and a mix of nationalities. Accommodation is in boarding schools, and there are many activities to choose from: football, mountain biking, tennis, drama, filmmaking, journalism and performing arts.
- B PGL – or ‘Parents Get Lost’ as it is known – is the Big Daddy of summer camp providers, with 12 centres across the country, including in Marchants Hill in Surrey, and nearly 70 years of experience in delivering non-stop holiday fun. Its classic seven-day camps offer over 40 activities on land and water, including dance, photography, biking, and canoeing. Each summer there are new attractions, with SUP and Tag Archery new this year.
- C Tech-loving children aged 9-17 can get “hands-on” experience with summer courses in everything from coding to Minecraft engineering and game design to artificial intelligence. Teachers from the UK’s top universities work with small classes (eight students to one teacher). Activities include problem solving games, critical thinking challenges and creative projects to make sure that the children are not simply staring at a screen all day.
- D From lighting fires and sleeping under the stars to following animal tracks, Camp Wilderness is meant for children between 8 and 14 years of age. Children stay for three or five nights in tents, learning a range of skills taught by outdoor adventure experts. Shelter building, picking berries and mushrooms, BBQs, wild swimming, scavenger hunts and cricket are all on the menu, and for those who want more, the adventurer Ed Stafford offers a more advanced survival camp.
- E For 13-17-year-olds who love films, whether it is creating them or acting in them, this Screen Acting Summer Camp is a dream come true: a chance to eat, sleep and breathe filmmaking. The camp is held at Culford School, one of the UK’s leading boarding schools. Students divide into two crews: filmmakers and actors. They learn specialised skills through practical exercises and workshops with film industry professionals.

Task 1 (6 points)

Twelve-year-old skateboarder Sky Brown wants to compete in the Olympics. In the text below, she tells a little about herself. Read the text and decide which word (A, B or C) best fits each gap (26–31).

Write the letter in the gap.

An example (0) has been done for you.

Sky Brown: the 12-year-old skateboarder with an Olympic dream

I was born in Miyazaki, Japan and (0) A there until last year, when we moved to California. I started skating when I was two or three. My dad built a mini-ramp in our backyard for him and his friends. He used to skate every day and I used to (26) _____ his board and play with it. It was my favourite toy. I wouldn’t walk (27) _____ – I rode my dad’s board instead.

When I was younger and saw my dad doing a cool trick, I used to think “I want to try that.” I then (28) _____ it up on YouTube and tried to learn it. Now I just learn stuff from my friends. It’s nice to skate with your friends because you (29) _____ teach each other things.

I never really thought, “I’m going to get so good (30) _____ this and go pro.” I just got better and better, and it happened naturally when I was seven. When I was eight, I became the first female skater to land a frontside 540. That’s when you spin one-and-a-half times counter-clockwise.

Sometimes doing a trick can be scary. Especially the one after you fall, because you don’t want it to happen again. But then I also feel that falling is just part of skateboarding.

I like inspiring (31) _____ girls to do what they want to do. I don’t want girls to think that boys can do things that they can’t. I want girls to think, “I can do it, because I’m a girl.” If I can do it, so can they.

I decided to change my job

I am Daniel Giusti. I was the head chef at Noma, which was voted the best restaurant in the world many times. But in 2016, I decided to leave the restaurant and started Brigaid, a program that places professional chefs in school kitchens to advise canteen lunch staff. There is a lot that is different about cooking for a canteen full of elementary schoolers than a table of people who can afford to fly to Copenhagen and spend thousands of euros on a meal, but one thing they have in common is that they will certainly tell you what they think of the food.

The stereotype for what school lunches taste like is not great. The same goes for hospitals, senior centers and prisons. In every single one of these institutions, food plays a hugely important role. Despite this, they are not places that traditionally attract top chefs, and that is what I am trying to change. I hope that when chefs graduate from cooking school, they get excited about using their creativity in kitchens that serve these population groups.

When it comes to making school lunches, there are a lot of challenges, but the biggest ones are staying within budget (only 2-3 euros for a meal), following the government’s health guidelines and making foods kids actually want to eat. I will tell you this: kids are a lot more likely to eat fruit when it is sliced and seasoned than when it is in the form of a waxy apple not even cut up. But these challenges are part of the fun of getting creative as a chef: “You have €3, a fridge full of fresh ingredients, and a building full of hungry kids. Go!”

Another thing I have learned is that, when it comes to changing the way massive institutions like public schools or prisons approach food, the ingredients are not the most important thing. Sure, it is great to have fresh products, but what matters most are the employees in the kitchen. I think sometimes in the food world, the importance of the food can be placed over the importance of the people making the dishes. There are some chefs who are really ambitious and they want to focus on the quality of the food and how each carefully crafted dish comes out. That is great and there is absolutely nothing wrong with that. But, ultimately, the people are what is most important — and that goes for any system, not just food.

The coronavirus pandemic has really shaken up the restaurant industry and I am curious to see what happens moving forward. I hope the chefs in cooking school right now start thinking about working at places like schools and hospitals after they graduate. I think that would be really cool. And it will improve you as a chef, too. Because, again, kids do not hold anything back. If they do not like your pasta with homemade tomato sauce, you will know it. There is no doubt about that.
